Curriculum Implementation for Leaders: Intellectual preparation

The critical role of intellectual preparation

Support and feedback in live coaching calls.

Implementing high quality instructional materials

Develop an action plan for professional learning in your own school.

This course supports leaders to reorient school and teacher practices away from 'making' lessons towards adopting, adapting and refining existing curriculum resources to meet students at their point of need.

Across three workshops, small teams of leaders will learn how to select and implement a high quality curriculum or instructional resource – including but not limited to Ochre units, senior secondary lesson resources and textbooks.

Curriculum Implementation for Leaders: Intellectual preparation and collaborative planning to support effective responsive teaching

Who is it for?

This program is designed for school-based leadership teams who are keen to develop their understanding of how to incorporate pre-prepared materials into existing school materials. Teams will work together to develop processes that build a culture of strong intellectual preparation for teaching. Leadership teams could include middle leaders, heads of department or Principals (depending on school context). Participants can be drawn from across states and territories and all sectors. Ideally, participating schools should have an existing pedagogical model to draw from.

How is it structured?

There are three 3-hour virtual workshops (via Zoom) (scheduled during late mornings AEST / early mornings AWST), in which school teams learn together and apply that learning in session.

Alongside the virtual workshops, schools have access to a range of templates and readings to support their work. They have an opportunity to consult with curriculum experts for feedback and next-step problem-solving, conducted as a 30-minute online group coaching session assigned per school.

All workshops will also be recorded for review.

When does the program run?

Cohort 1 will kick-off in Term 1 2026 to support planning for the 2026 school year.
